They have arranged the quotations alphabetically according to the hearer. Who knows what else he would have. Horace Porter, an officer on Grant's staff, quoted Lincoln as telling Grant on this occasion, "I was opposed on nearly every side when I first favored the raising of colored regiments, but they have proved their efficiency, and I am glad they have kept pace with the white troops in the recent assaults.

BookratingsbyGoodreads.Temporarilyoutofstock. Review of Carwardine, Richard J. Welcome. Chapter 6 argues that Lincoln was conscious of and actively engaged in the mobilization of popular support for the war effort, yet at the same time he remained cognizant of the brute instrument of his power--the Union Army--and the role that physical power and coercion could, and should, play in the Union's moral, as well as military, victory.
