Literary Since Emerson wrote his immortal essays, and Maeterlinck advanced his beautiful theories, no finer book on the spiritual life has been written. The principal method for altering the nature of air, early chemists learned, was to heat or burn some compound in it. Such enrich ment is his gain in death, since he ac quires the condensed consciousness of the whole earthly estimate concerning him ; he grasps in full measure the bushel, of which in life he could count but a few kernels.
