Every day, I get e-mails from so many women. Thanks for this, it put into thoughtful, clear words a lot of feelings I am trying to explain at the moment. Am resting at the moment, but itching to get my case out for my trip away at the beginning of January.

However, when people are able to face these feelings, they can essentially see I feel stronger than ever before and feel connected to all of you, because we are all very strong, capable people who have faced, and fought against the worst of odds and yet we continue to survive. I have next to no family.

I feel oddly different to even my own boys. Changes in our lives can also alter the role we want our relationship to play in our life: a mother may suddenly find herself re-assessing whether her relationship gives her everything she needs after her grown-up children have left home.
