While reading this book, I pictured the final home in the book, "The Glass Castle," set deep in the mountains in coal-country. I was moved to tears by his story. The details in the book are pretty much what really happened. The author left several loose ends that I would have loved to have seen resolved. It's the story of an 18 year old mountain girl who is being raised by her grandparents after the death of her mother during child birth. I rarely re-read books, but these are two that I will keep and enjoy again soon. Your email address will not be published. The aesthetic cover grabbed me with its colors and potential sorrow hiding under the fog. In less than four years three of the eight million people that populated Cambodia were killed.
